I missed this in Florida's prosecution of adult gaming sites last week: the sites were in compliance with the AV law.

Nutaku claims to be been below the 33% threshold for liability in Florida. Spicevids was age-verifying visitors.

The Attorney General's office sued them anyway.

Vague laws and lawless enforcement are the hallmarks of government censorship. The AG's office not only went after these gaming sites, but after payment processors associated with them — something not permitted under the law.

But lawsuits, however frivolous, are a great intimidation tactic.
